Driving Cars

Waymo, which started as the Google self-driving car project in 2009, is ready for the next phase. Starting now, Waymo's fully self-driving vehicles – the most advanced self-driving vehicles on the road today – are test-driving on public roads, without anyone in the driver's seat. And soon, members of the public will get to use these vehicles in their daily lives.

After more than eight years of testing and development, we're ready to unlock the potential of fully self-driving technology, so we can make it easier and safer for everyone to get around.
